PREFACE

"Books are keys to wisdom's treasure;
Books are gates to lands of pleasure;
Books are paths that upward lead;
Books are friends. Come, let us read."
—EMILIE POULSSON

READING, like play for the body, is the natural exercise of a healthy mind. Parents, who are justly solicitous about the companions of their children, frequently pay little or no attention to the selection of their general reading. This is a serious mistake. A child sitting under a tree by the river reading a book is a beautiful picture, but whether he is being helped or injured depends upon the book. The influence of bad books cannot be estimated. Do not leave the selection of books to the suggestion of immature companions or to the unguided fancy of childhood."

—Frank David Boynton

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

WHEN a child has been taught to read, we have placed in his hands a very sharp edged tool. Whether he is going to use it to his advantage or not depends upon what he reads. With those who were responsible for his learning to read also rests to a large degree, the responsibility of determining what he will read.

It is then, for those who know the fields of literature to lead youth through the mists of a veritable Niagara of so called "Children's Books" to Literature for Children, to those true literary selections suited to their years and chosen from the great writers; to those books which stand the tests for good literature. Children while fascinated by the reading of the present moment may thus absorb from that which they read, the worth-while thoughts of the great writers of all ages and will see clearly in the imaginary lives of the story people those forces which make for strength of character in not only one nation but those which last through the countless generations of all peoples.

Moreover, it is as much what children do in their playtime as in their consciously directed work time that moulds character in growing boys and girls. So in their many hours of reading if children have been exposed to the worth-while thought in good books they will later be unattracted by the mediocre or common. They will in all probability continue to choose for their reading those books which picture in admirable and charming characters the things which make for highest happiness in right living.

Believing that this great responsibility is ours, it has always been our conscious purpose to place before the children of the Ithaca Public Schools many of the best books for children's reading. This past year several hundred carefully selected volumes have been put into the hands of the children. A Children's library has been established in every elementary school in the city. This makes it possible for each room and consequently all children to have free access to some good books for their spare time reading.
